Intego, best known for their anti-virus and computer security products has just announced a new product to help families protect and secure iPhones and iPads running iOS version 8 or later. The product, called Family Protector, gives parents control of iOS mobile devices and offers a number of interesting features that may be of particular interest to parents.

Parents can let kids know when it's time to come to the table and restrict the device with just a few clicks.

Restrictions can be enabled during bedtime hours to eliminate distractions or unwanted contact with your child at night.

If your child is unresponsive to your calls or texts, you can block access to third party apps or web browsing and send your child to a special lock screen with a message to call you back.

Schedule screen time breaks.

Enable age-appropriate safe web browsing.

Limit access to age appropriate music, movies, and books.

Get notifications if your child tries to access a blocked web site or app, tries to install a forbidden app, or removes Family Protector from their device.

Block app and in-app purchases.

Block access to their device's camera or Face Time messaging.

Know when they are online.

Control which apps are on their device.

Use age-based-rules to setup restrictions.

Block (blacklist) or allow (whitelist) web sites.

Young people often find "porn" accidentally.
